

for a labor union in Montpelier, Vt., and enjoys it most days. He and his wife, Kay, welcomed a daughter, Lia, in May 2005. Their daughter, Tessa, is now 3 and quite opinionated — they have no idea where she gets it! In January 2005, Barbara S. Whitbeck and her husband welcomed a second baby boy, Milo Isaac Whitbeck. Older brother Hunter is having a ball! Senta L. Wong is now of counsel in the Boston office of Fish & Richardson; she is in the trademark, copyright, media and entertainment group. Senta focuses her practice on intellectual property and transactions, particularly for companies engaged in the design, development, publishing, marketing, distribution, licensing and other exploitation of interactive entertainment properties. She is also cochairing the firm's interactive entertainment practice.

1997

Curtis Tucker was named general director of the Lake George Opera in Saratoga Springs, N.Y. Also a composer, his original opera, "The Stranger's Tale," received its world premiere at Ohio's Sorg Opera in April 2005.

1998

Christopher Scott Goeken and his partner since 1993, Glenn Duque Magpantay, held a commitment ceremony in September. Christopher is in private practice in Jackson Heights, New York. Christie Getto Young was promoted to senior director of public policy at United Way of Massachusetts Bay, where she has worked for five years and says she still loves it. She and her husband welcomed their second child, Elijah, in October 2004. He joins big sister, Emma, 4.

1999

Tiffany M. Williams has joined the New Jersey-based firm of Riker Danzig Scherer Hyland Perretti as an associate focusing on commercial litigation, representation of public entities, administrative law and white-collar criminal defense.

2000

Celia L. Wagner, general counsel at Citizens Bank New Hampshire, was profiled as a "rising star" in the May 2005 issue of Business NH Magazine.

2001

Megumi Fujita and Brian Sherry were married in May 2005 in Washington, DC, with many law school friends in

PROFILE Paul Moore '88

Moore for the Troops

The Paul S. Moore Law Office in Nashua, New Hampshire, looks like any other well-appointed small practice. There's a comfortable reception area, diplomas on the wall and coffee for waiting visitors. But peek behind the conference room door and you'll find a decidedly un-legal sight: floor-to-ceiling boxes of beef jerky, trail mix, ibuprofen and medicated foot powder.

Welcome to Mooremart, a volunteer effort providing care packages to US soldiers serving in Iraq and Afghanistan.

"My brother, Brian, is in the New Hampshire National Guard. He was deployed to Iraq in 2003 and redeployed to Afghanistan earlier this year," explains Moore, who serves as a part-time district court judge in addition to heading his law practice. "When troops moved beyond the supply lines, we heard from Brian that soldiers missed some of the comforts of home."

Moore and his family sprang to action, assembled boxes of the most requested items and shipped them to men and women in Brian's unit. "This is even better than Walmart!" remarked one soldier upon opening the care package.

Thus "Mooremart" was born.

Moore challenged those first recipients to spread the word to other troops and email their requests to him. To date, he's shipped 500 computer paper boxes, averaging 25 boxes per month. The family solicits supplies and donations for shipping from veterans' organizations, local businesses, and school and church groups.

In addition to personal care and food items, Moore now includes school supplies with each shipment. "Afghan schools are reopening," he notes. "Brian told us he'd drive through villages and kids would run alongside the truck, asking not for candy, but for pens."

"This is not a political issue to us," says Moore, who served in the Army until a parachuting accident left him with paraplegia. "US troops are doing good things over there, restoring electric power, laying sewer lines, and clearing road mines that isolated villages for 25 years. Most times, that gets lost in the media." Through Mooremart, "We're doing what we can to help out, not only my brother, but also the Afghan people."

— Maura King Scully

PHOTO: MICHAEL MANNING